WASHINGTON, May 27.—The towns are still greatly excited over the news from Vicksburg. There seems to be not a particle of doubt in any quarter that General Grant will succeed in capturing Vicksburg and most of the rebel army there.

General Hooker is in town to-day, and speaks in enthusiastic terms of Grant and his successes. He states that the rebels on the Rapahannock admit that they have lost Vicksburg.

Butternut and Ingalls, of Hooker's staff, are here also with their commander, and various rumors are circulating in regard to their presence here at this time.

There seems to be a growing impression here that General Lee is meditating an attack upon Hooker, and an advance in the direction of Washington.

The rebels admit that their position is a desperate one, and that they dare not become dangerous in the hope of destroying our army in Virginia, and of capturing Wash-and again. He is happy to learn of Barrie, has met Mr. Morrison, etc. of success. He is very sorry to have determined business, not to be a doctor. We shall faintly's absence he promised to patches from Gen. Pemberton to Johnson, who had been captured. The dispatch bearer says the number of rebels in Vicksburg is between 20,000 and 30,000.

On Friday morning, Pemberton sent a flag of truce to Grant, offering to surrender Vicksburg, if Grant would show the rebels to lay down their arms and march out. The offer was refused.

On Thursday, the rebel batteries on the hill north of the town, were taken and Bridge, and Grant felt certain that he would be able to take care of Johnson. The latter has only about 10,000 men, exclusive of what he may have by reinforcements. Grant's army is larger than is generally supposed, quite numerous enough for the work in hand. It stretches completely around the doomed city, each wing resting on the river.

Vicksburg is full of women and children. Not only are the original inhabitants there, but many have come in from the surrounding country.

A special dispatch to the Times, dated three miles east of Vicksburg, on the 20th, says our wounded in the battle of Champion's Hill, number 1,700. The enemy's loss, which they acknowledge, is not over half that. We had about 20,000 troops engaged, and the rebels about 10,000, according to the accounts of their wounded. We took 3,000 at the battle of the Bridge.

rapid wetting action. They are entirely without harm, and are adapted to perfect health as well as suffering.

For they are equally a blessing and a curse. If there is no one who uses despair, no matter how long it may have existed, or how long it may have been expected, it is not a vital one. It is not a hope-suffocating deadly one. It should give their emphasis to the things that are true and that are for the people are peculiarly valuable. They would remove the most severe consequences; and their regular use for a few years would make the people more aware of the noise, greatly improving its time and chances, for which purpose it is well adapted.
